CRAP Checklist: Prove that your research source isn't CRAP! ☺ Write notes after each question in the middle section and circle the yes/no questions.

Website: _____ URL: _____

Hint: The more "Yes" answers you get, the better your website!

Currency How old is the information?	Is it a science or technology based document? Does it cover current events? If so, it needs to be very current . If it is a humanities or historical document, these documents can be decades old and still relevant. When was this site last updated? What date can you find?
	Is it current enough for your project?	Yes	No
Reliability Is this information accurate? What is the origin of the information?	Who is sponsoring this publication?
	Does the information come from a school or government organization? (.edu, .gov and sometimes .org—non-profit)	Yes	No
	Why do you trust this source? Why, or why not?	Yes	No
Authority Who is behind the information?	Is there a specific author listed on the website?	Yes	No
	What knowledge or skill does this author have in the topic area?
	Is the author's email address, contact information, included?	Yes	No
	Is the information from a known and trusted organization?	Yes	No
	Is there a bibliography given citing the website sources used? Do links go to other reliable information?	Yes	No
Purpose What is the motive of the site?	Does the website seek to inform you and present various sides of an argument or issue?	Yes	No
	Is the information use neutral language? Is it free of bias (clearly one-sided opinion), and not trying to sell you something?	Yes	No

Is this a website you can rely on?   YES   NO
Why or why not? _____

CRAP Checklist: Prove that your research source isn't CRAP! ☺ Write notes after each question in the middle section and circle the yes/no questions.

Website: _____ URL: _____

Hint: The more "Yes" answers you get, the better your website!

Currency How old is the information?	Is it a science or technology based document? Does it cover current events? If so, it needs to be very current. If it is a humanities or historical document, these documents can be decades old and still relevant. When was this site last updated? What date can you find?
	Is it current enough for your project?	Yes	No
Reliability Is this information accurate? What is the origin of the information?	Who is sponsoring this publication?
	Does the information come from a school or government organization? (.edu, .gov and sometimes .org—non-profit)	Yes	No
	Why do you trust this source? Why, or why not?	Yes	No
Authority Who is behind the information?	Is there a specific author listed on the website?	Yes	No
	What knowledge or skill does this author have in the topic area?
	Is the author's email address, contact information, included?	Yes	No
	Is the information from a known and trusted organization?	Yes	No
	Is there a bibliography given citing the website sources used? Do links go to other reliable information?	Yes	No
Purpose What is the motive of the site?	Does the website seek to inform you and present various sides of an argument or issue?	Yes	No
	Is the information use neutral language? Is it free of bias (clearly one-sided opinion), and not trying to sell you something?	Yes	No

Is this a website you can rely on?   YES   NO

Why or why not? _____

CRAP Checklist: Prove that your research source isn't CRAP! ☺ Write notes after each question in the middle section and circle the yes/no questions.

Website: _____ URL: _____

Hint: The more "Yes" answers you get, the better your website!

Currency How old is the information?	Is it a science or technology based document? Does it cover current events? If so, it needs to be very current. If it is a humanities or historical document, these documents can be decades old and still relevant. When was this site last updated? What date can you find?
	Is it current enough for your project?	Yes	No
Reliability Is this information accurate? What is the origin of the information?	Who is sponsoring this publication?
	Does the information come from a school or government organization? (.edu, .gov and sometimes .org—non-profit)	Yes	No
	Why do you trust this source? Why, or why not?	Yes	No
Authority Who is behind the information?	Is there a specific author listed on the website?	Yes	No
	What knowledge or skill does this author have in the topic area?
	Is the author's email address, contact information, included?	Yes	No
	Is the information from a known and trusted organization?	Yes	No
	Is there a bibliography given citing the website sources used? Do links go to other reliable information?	Yes	No
Purpose What is the motive of the site?	Does the website seek to inform you and present various sides of an argument or issue?	Yes	No
	Is the information use neutral language? Is it free of bias (clearly one-sided opinion), and not trying to sell you something?	Yes	No

Is this a website you can rely on?   YES   NO

Why or why not? _____

CRAP Checklist: Prove that your research source isn't CRAP! ☺ Write notes after each question in the middle section and circle the yes/no questions.

Website: _____ URL: _____

Hint: The more "Yes" answers you get, the better your website!

Currency How old is the information?	Is it a science or technology based document? Does it cover current events? If so, it needs to be very current. If it is a humanities or historical document, these documents can be decades old and still relevant. When was this site last updated? What date can you find?
	Is it current enough for your project?	Yes	No
Reliability Is this information accurate? What is the origin of the information?	Who is sponsoring this publication?
	Does the information come from a school or government organization? (.edu, .gov and sometimes .org—non-profit)	Yes	No
	Why do you trust this source? Why, or why not?	Yes	No
Authority Who is behind the information?	Is there a specific author listed on the website?	Yes	No
	What knowledge or skill does this author have in the topic area?
	Is the author's email address, contact information, included?	Yes	No
	Is the information from a known and trusted organization?	Yes	No
	Is there a bibliography given citing the website sources used? Do links go to other reliable information?	Yes	No
Purpose What is the motive of the site?	Does the website seek to inform you and present various sides of an argument or issue?	Yes	No
	Is the information use neutral language? Is it free of bias (clearly one-sided opinion), and not trying to sell you something?	Yes	No

Is this a website you can rely on?   YES   NO
Why or why not? _____

CRAP Checklist: Prove that your research source isn't CRAP! ☺ Write notes after each question in the middle section and circle the yes/no questions.

Website: _____ URL: _____

Hint: The more "Yes" answers you get, the better your website!

Currency How old is the information?	Is it a science or technology based document? Does it cover current events? If so, it needs to be very current. If it is a humanities or historical document, these documents can be decades old and still relevant. When was this site last updated? What date can you find?
	Is it current enough for your project?	Yes	No
Reliability Is this information accurate? What is the origin of the information?	Who is sponsoring this publication?
	Does the information come from a school or government organization? (.edu, .gov and sometimes .org—non-profit)	Yes	No
	Why do you trust this source? Why, or why not?	Yes	No
Authority Who is behind the information?	Is there a specific author listed on the website?	Yes	No
	What knowledge or skill does this author have in the topic area?
	Is the author's email address, contact information, included?	Yes	No
	Is the information from a known and trusted organization?	Yes	No
	Is there a bibliography given citing the website sources used? Do links go to other reliable information?	Yes	No
Purpose What is the motive of the site?	Does the website seek to inform you and present various sides of an argument or issue?	Yes	No
	Is the information use neutral language? Is it free of bias (clearly one-sided opinion), and not trying to sell you something?	Yes	No

Is this a website you can rely on?   YES   NO

Why or why not? _____

CRAP Checklist:

Prove that your research source isn't CRAP! ☺ Write notes after each question in the middle section and circle the yes/no questions.

Website: _____ URL: _____

Hint: The more "Yes" answers you get, the better your website!

Currency How old is the information?	Is it a science or technology based document? Does it cover current events? If so, it needs to be very current. If it is a humanities or historical document, these documents can be decades old and still relevant. When was this site last updated? What date can you find?
	Is it current enough for your project?	Yes	No
Reliability Is this information accurate? What is the origin of the information?	Who is sponsoring this publication?
	Does the information come from a school or government organization? (.edu, .gov and sometimes .org—non-profit)	Yes	No
	Why do you trust this source? Why, or why not?	Yes	No
Authority Who is behind the information?	Is there a specific author listed on the website?	Yes	No
	What knowledge or skill does this author have in the topic area?
	Is the author's email address, contact information, included?	Yes	No
	Is the information from a known and trusted organization?	Yes	No
	Is there a bibliography given citing the website sources used? Do links go to other reliable information?	Yes	No
Purpose What is the motive of the site?	Does the website seek to inform you and present various sides of an argument or issue?	Yes	No
	Is the information use neutral language? Is it free of bias (clearly one-sided opinion), and not trying to sell you something?	Yes	No

Is this a website you can rely on?   YES   NO

Why or why not? _____